ABE, Rear Admiral KATSUO

The Japanese High Command, upon the advice of Abe and Vice Admiral NOMURA, had agreed that they would attack Russia as soon as the German armies closed the Russian Caucasus campaign; despite the grave warnings of Shigenori TOJO (JAPAN) and Ambassador SATO (RUSSIA) that this was not expedient until the Germans had not only taken Stalingrad but the right bank of the Volga from Murmansk to Astrakhan, the High Command went ahead with its plans for a Russian attack.

Report of a Neutral Diplomat, Tokyo, July 14, 1942, transmitted to the Spanish government, Madrid, by CISNEROS (q.v., SPAIN).

Offered Giraud (q.v.) the post as French Delegate charged with the interests of prisoners if he would surrender; Germans would have released all French prisoners of class 1901 (approximately 6,000) and all prisoners working in fields and factories would have been allowed 15 days leave to return to their homes after which they would return to Germany as workmen; it was believed Giraud would refuse to surrender for this last German offer; Abetz threatened additional reprisals for Giraud's refusal of the post.
